These days we learn through a several mediums and you can access those materials using any modern device that has an internet connection. You have the ability to watch videos on your computer, smartphone, laptop, television, and you can easily access them through your iPod. Not only can you buy videos online, but you can make a digital movie of your own, creating a panoply of material to learn. Sadly, not everything is available online and many of the videos contain videos to learn. While this might be a bit disappointing, it does create an opportunity to learn about the subject through video and a different medium. The good news is that online videos are easy to access. You don't have to have a specific device or computer that can use the internet. You can access videos from your phone and the quality is just as good as any other device. A wide variety of videos are available and they can be accessed from the web, iTunes, and even your television. The good news is that there are a variety of videos available on a multitude of devices. When it comes to learning through video, there are a few things to consider before you decide which videos to watch. As you are learning about Photoshop you should not choose the first or best video to watch. Rather choose a video or two that you feel comfortable learning through. As you are learning about Photoshop, one or more videos should be available on a specific topic. Ideally, you should choose a video that will cover a specific topic. Videos that will cover general information are great to learn about but they won't really teach you about Photoshop. You may have been introduced to Photoshop and now you want to learn more. Another important aspect of the video is the questions that are asked. As you watch the video, answer the questions you have. If the question isn't answered in the video, record your own question on a notepad. When you have recorded your own question, mark it as a "homework question." Once you have recorded a homework question, mark it by clicking on the rectangle in the question box. Source:
