The term "art" can be defined as the vision we have as a society relating to nature and life, a way of expressing feelings that actually interpret reality as you think it makes no difference who sees it. Any distinguishing feature for this type of art was impossible to draw. When I discovered this new definition, I found that the concept of "art" was very vague. It could be expressed more concisely than other forms of art, it could be measured and ultimately understood what it meant. However, now, I have a more definite concept of art. If artistic expression is finding correct equivalent visual images based on certain rules, then there is no continuous continuity between artistic models and surrogates. "Art" is an intuition that perceives art in its original source. The key to interpreting the phenomenon of "art" is actually understanding what is the basis for the art form - intuition. If an artist has such intuitive access to truth, he can use his intuition to create the desired image of reality. If not, he must use the method of studying the world around him and using this method to make his pictures real. Q: You recommend something. Why? A: When you work with an image partner, as we discussed, he must be willing to take some responsibility for it, because even if he can draw a beautiful picture, there may be errors and imperfections in it. If he is not a leader in creating an image, then will he really represent this or that object of reality well? Will his vision, even if it is very vivid, be accurate enough to embody the real qualities of this world? In this case, you may have a vague idea of what "mastery" is. However, there is a certain sense in this question, because there is a certain ability - the ability to feel things about which you have no idea. from here
