Share this article on LinkedIn Email Mercedes driver Pascal Wehrlein has been banned from Formula 1 after refusing to return to the Haas Formula 1 team following his role as reserve driver for the rest of the season. The team is set to use Wehrlein as reserve driver in a number of races, including the Belgian Grand Prix, in place of Romain Grosjean. Wehrlein's run was cut short after he crashed out of the Russian Grand Prix on Saturday. Haas F1 team principal Gunther Steiner had hoped to find a reserve driver to cover the Japanese Grand Prix. This had appeared to be part of an arrangement struck between the team and Mercedes over the use of their DRS system - but Wehrlein has now rejected that. "For the rest of the season, Pascal is not allowed to be on our race team," Steiner told Autosport. "I hope the FIA will make an exception because we tried to work something out." "We are not hiding the fact we had an arrangement." "We tried to work something out for the Japanese Grand Prix. We made some proposals." "But Pascal is leaving the team and we have made a statement." "We have nothing to hide. This is not a surprise." Mercedes was always not happy with Pascal as a reserve. "He wants to race, but the team needs a driver for its programme." Wehrlein had considered joining Manor F1 in place of the team's current reserve driver, the Manor-backed
