6. 10. Continue working in the Layers palette by dragging the Retouch layer from step five to the bottom of the stacking order. Leave the Opacity slider at 0 and set the Blending Mode to Overlay (Figure 9-11). The image should now look somewhat similar to Figure 9-10, with a large number of overlying paint strokes. Figure 9-10: Drag the layer with the paint strokes from step five to the bottom of the stacking order. Figure 9-11: In the Layers palette, change the Blending Mode to Overlay and drag the paint strokes layer down to the bottom of the stacking order. The amount of time it takes to retouch an image increases in proportion to the number of layers created. Photoshop was not designed for quick work, and the layer-based editing system can be a drag when layers are stacked. 4. Clean Up the Retouch Layer A good retouching starts with solid foundation. Color areas should be removed, and the contour of the face should be refined. The image below still has some flaws — for example, the eyes are out of focus and only the nose is partially completed. 5. Layer masking can take a little time, but the time saved is more than made up for by its simplicity. When you're done with the retouch layer, simply turn on the layer mask by selecting it from the Layers palette. Double-click the layer mask thumbnail for the Retouch layer. The layer mask automatically opens in its own window, so flip to the Mask panel. You'll see the same image as Figure 9-12. The goal of this step is to clean up the retouch layer to remove any unwanted areas. Figure 9-12: Use a layer mask to remove areas that are unneeded. 6. Click the Quick Selection tool and select the white areas from Step 4. The white areas are deleted, and you see the image below in Figure 9-13. Figure 9-13: Work with the mask to remove unwanted areas on the face. 7. Control-click (Windows) or right-click (Mac OS) and choose Remove To Create a New Layer (Mac) or Clone Layer (Windows) to duplicate the Retouch layer. Name the new layer something more specific than the original Retouch layer, such as Face. 8. Switch

Hello, thanks for your attention, dear readers! We really love to continue regularly our reviews, because you keep us up to date with the latest games. And one of the recent games we plan to talk about is just a beautiful outstanding masterpiece called Verdun. But to simply say it is a strategy game is not enough. It's more than that. It's like the perfect counter to the games like "World of Tanks", it shows the world that games don't have to be about military might. It is a beautiful game about art, cooperation and so many other things. It is worth to mention that we don't know how much will successful this game will be. But let's try to share something we know about it, so you could be a part of it. Maybe it's not a game you are considering, but what we recommend is the game I'm going to discuss with you in this week'

What's New In?

Q: The funny zone theory How did we come to the funny zone theory? How does "proportionally", "to the 12th", "in order of size", "in the area", etc., etc. come to be? Has anything been "proved" for this? A: The "funny zone theory" was effectively in use (at least in Austria in the 1950's) by, for example, Bernhard Strecha, who worked as a polytechnic professor (roughly equivalent to a high school teacher) and studied the proportions of a couple of hundred private elementary schools he visited. Those "schools" (actually, it was more like a building with 1-5 schoolrooms per "school") were mainly built in a rural area outside of Vienna and had some 200-300 pupils per class (under 6 years old). No one would be living in those buildings after the pupils finished their schools, so Strecha wanted to know whether they were equidistant from the building site or not. He visited at least 40 of those schools (I think around in 1970's) so he counted the building size (length and width) for every class and then tried to fit a quartic (4th power) curve to the data. From the result he came to the conclusion that the average distance between two of those elementary schools was roughly 470 meters, or a little bit more than half a kilometer. In today's world, that is a wide street, not a narrow alley and that is because, in 1940's, Austria was a very small country (despite the common view it is actually the 8th biggest in Europe in area). It may be interesting, but it was just a personal journey and it wasn't published in any kind of scientific journal. Just in a local paper that had some 10-20 scientific articles per year (in a language that was not English or French). In that language, Strecha had a legal obligation to publish it, but as Strecha was from Austria, the law stated that he had to publish it in a scientific journal in English language. Strecha's "theory" was in use during the 1970's and was even used in the "Downtown Study" (sponsored by the US government) by David Downing that tried to find suitable housing for new students (a lot of those students were from overseas) at high schools in the US. Those students' classes had to be equidistant and
