In-hospital mortality among patients with end-stage renal disease (ESRD) who receive home dialysis is alarmingly high. To compare the risk of in-hospital mortality among patients receiving home dialysis with a cohort of similar patients with ESRD who receive in-center dialysis. Prospective cohort study using data from a national Medicare claims database. 6,375 patients with Medicare fee-for-service claims for ESRD who initiated home dialysis between October 1, 1993, and December 31, 2006, and were alive at the end of the index hospitalization (ie, occurred within 6 months after hospitalization). Patients who received home dialysis vs those who received in-center dialysis. Relative risk of in-hospital mortality after ESRD hospitalization. Patients receiving home dialysis had a lower risk of in-hospital mortality after ESRD hospitalization (relative risk [RR], 0.59; 95% confidence interval [CI], 0.47-0.75) vs those receiving in-center dialysis. The adjusted risk of in-hospital mortality was 0.41 (95% CI, 0.25-0.68) among patients who received home dialysis, compared with 0.72 (95% CI, 0.60-0.87) among those who received in-center dialysis. Stratification by individual characteristics and propensity scores for receiving home dialysis yielded similar findings. Risk of readmission was slightly higher in patients receiving home dialysis vs those receiving in-center dialysis. Patients receiving home dialysis had a lower risk of in-hospital mortality than patients receiving in-center dialysis after ESRD hospitalization. Potential residual confounding, including selection, information, and misclassification biases, may have impacted the findings. leaving only the lowest floor intact. It does not appear to be a subtle plot, as the students are depicted as being given proper guns, in a modern interpretation of a cowboys and Indians film. The students are divided into two teams: the students from the west are known as the "bad guys" and the students from the east are known as the "good guys", while the school's staff are known as the "girls". It is eventually revealed that the students have been under the control of the Aliens, who are attempting to get the students to build a spaceship. When Alan learns that the school's headmaster and the police have been kidnapped, he calls the local mall, which is owned by Richard Israel, who is a friend of 3e33713323
