In the following exercise, you will use layer masks to create an image, paste in a photo of a dog, mask the image, and then paint in the highlights and shadows. You will use a lot of techniques that you may not have seen before, so don't be surprised if you have questions about them. You may also be surprised by how quickly you can create a finished product.

1. Begin Photoshop and follow these steps to load a picture into the Background layer:
 2. Choose File | Place to open the Place dialog box. Navigate to the Picture library and select a file from it. Select Create New Background (Figure 4-1) and click Open to display the Place dialog box. The file you just selected is now the new Background layer.
 3. Click OK to close the Place dialog box and accept the default size for the new Background layer, which is $5,280 \times 5,120$ pixels.
 4. On the new Background layer, deselect

Background in the Layers palette. Then click OK in the Create New Layer dialog box. Figure 4-1: Place a picture in the Background layer to use it in your creation. 5. In the Layers palette, create three more layers. Name them Image, Dog, and Background, as shown in Figure 4-2.

Figure 4-2: Create a new layer for each element of your image. 6. Select the Image layer and copy and paste it above the Background layer. Then use the Move tool to move it to the right 2 pixels. 7. With the Background layer highlighted, change the Blend mode to Color. Click OK in the Create New Layer dialog box to accept the change. 8. Select the Dog layer and copy and paste it above the Background layer. Use the Move tool to move it to the right 3 pixels.

9. With the Background layer highlighted, change the Blend mode to Darken. Click OK in the Create New Layer dialog box to accept the change.

10. With the Background layer still highlighted, create two new layers. Name them Highlights and Shadows, as shown in Figure 4-3.

11. To create the highlights, move the Highlights layer to the top of the Layers palette and choose Stroke with a Brush. In the brush Preset Gallery, select Brush

1. Select a Background Let's start with the very first step, select a background. Step 1 Click the "Background" layer in the Layers panel and choose any background you want from the choices shown in the second image. Step 2 By pressing the Space bar, the background layer becomes active. Step 3 Now, choose the color from the Brush picker you want to apply to your background. Click the color you want to paint on your background layer. Step 4 To achieve the precise brush stroke you want, choose the angle of your brush by toggling the Brush drop down menu. Click the angle you want to paint at. Step 5 Apply the paint by pressing the space bar to create a new layer in the background layer. Click the + sign in the upper-right corner of your document window to add a new layer to your document. Step 6 Click the "Paint" tab in the Layers panel. Step 7 The Paint tab contains several predefined brush options. Choose a brush setting from the Brush group that you want to use and click "OK" to set your brush. Step 8 To apply this brush stroke, press the space bar. Step 9 Press the "Ctrl/CMD + Backspace" (Backspace) key combination to delete the brush stroke and go back to the last brush stroke. Step 10 You should get this result on your background layer. 2. Select All Layers The next step is to select all the layers in your document. This will help you paint the image using different color tones. Step 1 By pressing the "Ctrl/CMD + A" (Select All) key combination, you'll select all layers in your document. Step 2 Now, press the "Ctrl/CMD + Alt + Shift" (Select Layer Options) 05a79cecff

The Role of Imodium (Loperamide) in the Management of Oesophagogastroduodenoscopy: A Randomized Double-Blind, Placebo-Controlled, Multi-Centre Trial. The presence of emesis in over 10% of patients undergoing oesophagogastroduodenoscopy (OGD) mandates anti-emetic treatment. The currently recommended first-line anti-emetic is intravenous ondansetron, but there has been uncertainty around the role of per os loperamide (Imodium®). We report the findings of a prospective, randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled, multi-centre trial. Adult patients were randomized to receive either loperamide 4mg immediately before the procedure or placebo. The primary endpoint was the percentage of patients with complete control of nausea and vomiting on arrival at the endoscopy suite. Secondary endpoints included proportions of patients with complete control of nausea and vomiting on endoscopy, vomiting on arrival to the endoscopy suite and on endoscopy, the need for rescue therapy and the incidence of adverse events. A total of 725 patients were randomized, of whom 437 received loperamide and 288 received placebo. The primary endpoint

(complete control of nausea and vomiting on arrival at the endoscopy suite) was met in 91.8% (95% CI 89.8%-93.6%) of loperamide-treated patients compared with 83.8% (95% CI 80.7%-87.1%) of placebo-treated patients (P=0.002). Loperamide was superior to placebo for complete control of nausea and vomiting on arrival at the endoscopy suite (P=0.002). First the video of Donald

Strategies to enhance the content, quality, and impact of graduate nursing education. Graduate nurses are in a key position to promote evidence-based clinical care. We question whether graduate nursing education has sufficient content, quality, and impact to have a positive influence on patient care. We used evidence-based literature to critique the graduate nursing programs offered at a major tertiary-care hospital and present a plan for improving these programs, including a learning environment that enables graduates to be influential leaders. We also provide practical suggestions to enhance the content, quality, and impact of graduate nursing education.

Tuesday, December 26, 2009 This week, my daughter Abby and I participated in the 30 Days to a New You Challenge at the New York City Ballet. The theme is new craft, and I feel like I am finally starting to get into doing crafts. I usually just admire the crafty people at work, but for a few months I didn't do any. It is hard to start because when I am shopping, or cooking, or cleaning, or doing anything else, I don't want to get another project on my hands. But, now, I am in a different place. The most recent project I started was an apron made out of fabric scraps. I found this tutorial online and made a first iteration. It's cute, easy to make, and inexpensive. I plan to make more! And, I'm cooking at home again and not going out to a restaurant. It's a blessing and a curse, but I think for the first time in a while, we are all healthy and happy. Everyone is enjoying the food, I am getting good sleep, we are using reusable dishes, and I don't have to drive or listen to music.

Wednesday, December 20, 2009 I love baking. I like to cook, but baking is more my thing. I love experimenting and making things up as I go. I am somewhat of a vegan though. I love to bake, but I try not to indulge too much in the unhealthy aspect of eating. Especially when I'm pregnant. I know being healthy is important, so I'm trying to make healthier substitutions for things like flour and butter. I'd love to bake more of my own bread, though. The past few weeks of cooking have been filled with delicious fresh foods and lots of fruit. My gardening is a little bit behind because it takes a little time for things to mature and grow, but I'm working on that
