The difference between Photoshop and other image manipulation programs, like Adobe's GIMP, is that Photoshop is the most high-level-user-friendly software, meaning that more advanced users can do more with Photoshop while beginners can get something done quickly. Photoshop also has the best suite of tools for manipulating color, maintaining precision, and adding custom graphical effects. Photoshop offers the best feature set for editing as well as a host of applications outside of its image editing tools. For example, there's Adobe Bridge, which provides easy access to your files, it's Fireworks—a vector graphics editor—with which to create web graphics and animations, and InDesign, which is a page layout program for making books, magazines, and newspapers. Photoshop is available on every major operating system. What is Photoshop? The Photoshop interface is the foundation of many graphic design programs. It's the way they all draw the different tools onto your screen. Photoshop was the first digital editor and is one of the most popular programs available. Any picture you take is a raster image, meaning that the pixels are arranged in rows and columns. But your photographs and scanned documents don't appear on screen in this raster form. The scanner or camera is scanning your documents or taking photographs of your original paintings on canvas. It does this by creating an electronic signal that translates to a raster image. There are several ways of representing a raster image, including a bitmap or pixel image, a vector or outline image, and a transparent overlay of another image. What is a bitmap or pixel image? A bitmap or pixel image is an electronic format for your scanned documents and photographs. Each pixel, or tiny dot, in a bitmap image is an individual element that does not represent your original work. It's made up of 8-bit numbers that represent the color of each pixel. In an 8-bit number, each bit represents a certain amount of color. You can choose to view your pixel image in eight colors: red, orange, yellow, green, cyan, blue, purple, and magenta. Each color is represented by a number between 0 and 255. A full-color image can contain 16-bit pixels, so the maximum number of colors is 2,016. How do bitmap images represent color? Bitmap images typically have 24-bit color

1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a mobile communication system, and more particularly, to a method and apparatus for transmitting and receiving a notification message on a high speed data dedicated physical channel (DPDCH) in a High Speed Downlink Shared Channel (HS-DSCH). 2. Description of the Related Art In Wideband Code Division Multiple Access (WCDMA) Universal Mobile Telecommunication Service (UMTS), a mobile station (MS) supporting high speed downlink shared channel (HS-DSCH) can transmit and receive high speed downlink packet data through a physical high speed downlink shared channel (HS-PDSCH). That is, the MS transmits and receives high speed downlink packet data to and from a base station (BS) supporting the HS-DSCH through the HS-PDSCH. FIG. 1 is a diagram illustrating a protocol of a high speed downlink shared channel (HS-DSCH). Referring to FIG. 1, the HS-DSCH includes a common physical high speed shared channel (HS-PHSCH) and a dedicated physical high speed shared channel (HS-DPSCH). The common physical high speed shared channel (HS-PHSCH) transmits a cell-specific channel signal through a physical radio frame, and the dedicated physical high speed shared channel (HS-DPSCH) transmits packet data to an individual user equipment (UE) through a high speed dedicated physical control channel (HS-DPCCH). The HS-PDSCH serves to realize high speed downlink packet data transmission through the HS-DSCH, and the HS-DSCH can be a dedicated transport channel. The UE can transmit and receive a plurality of high speed downlink packet data simultaneously through the HS-PDSCH. The HS-DSCH can be a dedicated transport channel, and the transport channel means a logical channel providing a service by use of a physical channel. The HS-DSCH can be located on a common frequency area or a Dedicated channel (DCH) area, and can be located on the common frequency area where a forward common pilot channel (FPCH), a common control channel (CCCH), a downlink common supplemental channel (DSCH), etc. are located. The HS-DSCH can also be located on a dedicated channel (DCH) area where a dedicated control channel (DCCH), a dedicated traffic channel (DTCH), etc. are located. The DCH

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to the field of product detection, and more specifically, to system and method for detecting product barcodes on a web of labels. 2. Description of the Related Art Many businesses use barcode scanners and laser scanners to read and decode barcodes on products. However, as each product moves through a production process, the barcodes on labels may become misaligned, rotated, warped, dirty, or scratched. These various conditions may cause the barcode on a given label to become unreadable when the label is scanned. As a result, the label may be useless. In order to avoid being charged with a product that is unusable, manufacturers may set a limit on the number of uses a label may have before being thrown out. The labels may be printed with the barcode and information. As a result, a manufacturer may be charged with stock that has become unusable after being scanned and charged with a profit on that unusable stock. Further, if a label happens to fall on a work surface, or is otherwise placed on the floor of a printing plant, the label may be damaged or destroyed, which results in no use of the labels, and a lost opportunity to sell. Additionally, a label manufacturer may be charged for a label that is damaged or destroyed while on a printing press. Therefore, it would be beneficial to provide a device, system, and method that determines if a label is being misread by a customer, and if so, will automatically disable the customer's barcode scanner to prevent the customer from charging stock or accepting the label in a transaction.
