I was installing it from a different computer or whatnot. So I took the serial file from the crack that Imagenomic had provided and changed it so that it pointed to the serial number I was getting from the official program. So it started up fine on my main machine and I was like p-effekt, Imagenomic has solved this issue. I downloaded it and it acted like it was going to work just fine. So I started thinking: why had I tried to install it from the program instead of the serial number. I downloaded it again and installed it. The same thing happened. Every single time I installed it it would tell me that it was successful but it would give me a serial number that was already registered to someone else. So I decided to uninstall it. I started over at the crack site and changed the serial number again. The installation started going fine and then when it got to the point where it gave me the yellow screen of death I got the same issue again. What the f.. So I went on to the Imagenomic forum, checked out the thread that was being referenced and opened up the file attached to the post. (I had a copy before I was going to install). In my case I found the keys in the resource list. I extracted them and tried to put them into the registry one by one. I believe I got them all in there except the key for the section which may have been broken. But I could not get the plugin to install at that time. So I put them into my plugin folder and went to go. At first it was telling me that the plugin was not working. But then it said that the developer was
