I would like to create the same object in JQuery, so I would like to assign an object to a property of another object. So I have the following object var exp = { state: "", name: "", city: "", country: "" } and I want to assign the 2 last properties of the object to the name and country of another object, so it would look like var exp = { state: "", name: "", city: "", country: {name: "", country: ""} } How can I do that? Is it possible? A: Sure: exp.country = { name:

Tuesday, February 16, 2013 This is a study I did on the history of the kilt in the Southern United States. I was able to trace back the beginnings of the kilt right in my hometown of Hattiesburg, Mississippi. The building itself, the Hattiesburg Labor Exchange was a former cotton warehouse for the Samuel F. Edney & Co. The building has been used for many purposes since the early 1900's. It served as a cotton exchange building in the 1910's, a bank in the 1920's, and for many years it was used by several businesses. In the late 1960's, the building found a new use as a cotton warehouse. When the building was renovated, the original tile flooring was scraped off and replaced with plywood. The new owners, the Duncan Materials Co., re-sanded and refinished the floors, installed carpet, and painted the exterior in a couple of different shades of white. The Duncan Materials Co. built the heavy metal door. The old wood frames of the doors had become very brittle and would peel off and cause the doors to stick. The windows are a bit off-
